To Whom It May Concern

I have reviewed the pdf of the AP facial x-ray image.

Findings:

The image is labelled Gregiaz Dorysiewicz and dated 15-09-17, taken at Spire Liverpool Hospital.

There is an arrow which has been placed on the image pointing to an area in the medial aspect of a maxillary sinus. The image is labelled contrary to standard practice, with the left marker on the right of the image.

The radiograph is normal in appearance. There are no radio-opaque foreign bodies.

Opinion:

The side labelling would need to be double-checked with the hospital that has taken the image.

An x-ray is a 2-D image of a 3-D structure, the skull. The area highlighted by the red arrow is bone.

This is lying more posteriorly than the maxillary sinus through which it can be seen.

A metallic structure such as a microchip would be of higher density than bone.

It should be borne in mind that some structures may not be radio-opaque and would thus not show up on imaging.

Statement of Truth
